one source of common and dramatic folklore is living right inside many of our homes it s a feature of civilization that dates back thousands of years and the superstitions it has attracted make for a powerful and problematic history righteousness alone as rachel might put it isn t necessarily going to put dinner something other than steamed chicken and vegetables for rashi s sake on the table a doctor s salary even in a rarefied specialty like hepatology at a prestigious manhattan hospital won t cut it it s not going to pay the tuition at the elite private schools she intends their future children to attend so that they befriend other children born into privilege and pursue higher education at elite institutions from which they can graduate into elite professions not medicine medicine entails working too hard and visible effort is for strivers not for the elite she wants them to be able to move through the world with as many barriers as possible preemptively removed by the generational wealth she hopes she and toby are building rachel has some understanding of what it feels like to hustle and it's been powerful fuel for her ambition but she also feels what a burden it is like many parents like toby himself she wants her kids lives to be better than hers has been and the factors she's identified as life improving are money geography and connections the latter two flow from the first so she gets cracking and she stays there
